Climate Victory Gardens

Saturday, 9:00 am Start at Sebastopol Library

Leader: Tor Allen

During the victory garden movement of World Wars I and II, Americans planted gardens to feed and support both their local communities and troops overseas. These efforts were wildly successful. By 1944, nearly 20 million victory gardens produced 8 million tons of food—around 40 percent of the fresh fruits and vegetables consumed in the U.S. at the time. This incredible show of grassroots organizing and community efforts are the inspiration for today's Climate Victory Garden movement.

For this Walk, we'll start at the Sebastopol LIBRARY, then explore nearby neighborhood Front Yard (Food) Gardens, a School Garden, and the Seed Garden. There are many benefits to growing food in our own gardens. By gardening using regenerative practices we can sequester carbon, helping to reduce climate change impacts, build community, and be part of a larger effort. The walk will be approximately 3 miles.
